PREFACE

In the exploitation of archives by an historical department for the general benefit of historical students there are naturally three stages of operation. The first process is that of the preparation and publication of summary guides, describing in general terms the contents of domestic or foreign archives. The second step is the preparation and publication of minuter descriptions, calendars usually, of some selected archival division or some special class of documents having sufficient importance to warrant treatment so detailed. The third stage of operation is the preparation and publication of important series of documents in full text. In the operations of the Department of Historical Research in the Carnegie Institution of Washington work of the first kind is represented by the two editions (1904 and 1907) of Messrs. Van Tyne and Leland's Guide to the Archives of the Government of the United States in Washington and by the summary surveys of the materials for American history in Cuban, Spanish, English, and Italian archives, which have been issued at various dates from 1907 to 1911.

The present volume is the first calendar of archive materials in Washington issued by the Department. It follows upon Messrs. Van Tyne and Leland's Guide in the natural sequence which has been described above. Its preparation was begun soon after the issue of the second edition of that manual. A beginning of the work of collecting material was made in 1908, by Dr. Marcus W. Jernegan, of the University of Chicago, and Miss Georgia Sanderlin, their work lying chiefly among the papers at the Department of State relating to the Territory Northwest of the River Ohio and the Michigan Territory. With the exception of these beginnings, the work of preparing the volume has been done by Mr. David W. Parker, who expended upon it the first six months of 1909 and the first seven months of 1910, together with some subsequent labors.

That the first class of papers in the Washington archives to be treated by way of calendar should be the papers relating to the territories was due to cogent reasons. While historical workers in the original thirteen states find their manuscript materials either within the borders of their own states or in London, the active and energetic historical societies of the West look to Washington for unprinted materials for that period of the history of each state which precedes the state's admission into the Union. Many inquiries into the history of their territorial periods are therefore prosecuted in Washington archives, and call for better means of systematic research.

But in the second place the methodical pursuit of such researches is made exceedingly difficult by the wide distribution of such papers in the various governmental establishments. This is not the place in which to enlarge upon the undeveloped state of the archives in the national capital. Historical investigators, or readers of Messrs. Van Tyne and Leland's Guide, do not need to be told that, instead of having one central National Archive Building, in which papers not in current use may be adequately housed, arranged, and administered as in the British Public Record Office, it has been our custom that each bureau shall keep its own records in such manner as it, or its department, shall see fit, and that consequently we have a hundred archives, often badly housed, and arranged and administered upon many different systems. In the case of papers relating to the territories, however, the case is peculiarly bad. Since 1873, when the care of the territories was assigned by act of Congress to the Department of the Interior, archival papers respecting them have been in a relative degree concentrated, and for that reason the collection of material for this book was nowhere carried beyond that date. For the preceding period, however, there are many places of deposit in which a greater or lesser number of territorial papers may be found, and there has been a sufficient want of logic and system in the distribution to make it impossible for anyone to predict with certainty where a given paper may be found.

Before their assignment to the Department of the Interior the territorial governments were dependent in greater or less degree upon the Department of State, and papers relating to them are preserved by that department in large quantities, but with no certainty in the method of distribution between the Bureau of Rolls and Library and the Bureau of Indexes and Archives. Many events in the territories have been of such a character that materials respecting them might be found in the archives of the Department of War. Others, especially since the care of the Indians was transferred from that department to that of the Interior, may be found in certain offices of the latter department, others in the General Land Office, others in the rich but unexplored treasures of the Senate files and the House files, or in the one place in Washington where historical documents can be examined with entire convenience, the Library of Congress.

Papers so dispersed call more loudly for a calendar than any body of papers which are confined within the walls of one department, and the textual publication of which may therefore be provided for in accordance with departmental designs. But though the reasons for giving first place to a calendar of territorial papers were adequate, the search and survey had not long proceeded when it became plain that the total mass of all papers relating in any way to the history of the territories was too great for presentation by calendar within the limits contemplated for the proposed volume. For instance, if one were to attempt to deal with all papers treating of any happenings in any territory, most of the tons of material in the General Land Office would have to be comprised. While no doubt many documents have been lost, so that one could never reason that because a paper ought to be found in the Washington archives it is there, the whole mass is too appalling, and much of it of too slight historical significance, to make so wholesale a treatment expedient. A definite limitation of the scope of the proposed volume became necessary.

The interest of historical writers at the present time is, and in the immediate future it will apparently continue to be, greatest in respect to those papers which have to do with the territory as a whole, as an administrative unit, as an organic body of population on its way to statehood, and which accordingly have to do, in one sense or another, with its government and its constitutional and political history. Accordingly the attention of the compiler has been concentrated upon papers of this class. The delimitation has at times been difficult, for papers made by human beings do not, it is familiar, always adapt themselves definitely to the classifications invented by the student. In such instances Mr. Parker was instructed to err on the side of inclusion.

Certain general explanations of the manner in which the boundaries of the task were drawn may, however, be offered. The residence of an Indian tribe within a territory was deemed no reason for including the voluminous papers relating to that tribe in a manual of territorial documents; this conclusion was fortified by remembrance of the many cases in which the location or hunting-grounds of tribes bore no relation to territorial boundaries. Similarly in the case of Indian wars, besides the fact that military expeditions engaged in them crossed and recrossed territorial boundaries, it was felt that our need of close delimitation required the exclusion of military papers which were not in any legal, governmental, or other exact sense territorial. Documents of a narrowly local character have as a rule not been included, attention being confined to those which either deal with the territory as a whole or at the least relate to large distinct portions of it, such as land districts (the unit of administration in Treasury and General Land Office papers), and occasionally counties. Documents bearing upon subjects of an international character have been listed when it was clearly apparent that the question directly affected a territory. In all territories census statistics and documents dealing with the same have been counted among the important papers. On the other hand, memorials, etc., relating to post routes and canals, harbors, river navigation, roads, private land claims, other minor land matters, county business, lighthouses, depredations on public timber, and the like, together with general appropriation bills, have been with few exceptions excluded. Papers relating to railroads and other internal improvements have also been omitted from notice, except in rare instances where the improvements in question might be said to have a direct bearing upon the whole territory.

Besides this definition of class, it was felt necessary to secure further reduction by omission of many papers of certain sorts, on account of their lack of historical importance. Although there is a sense in which any paper may have historical value, and in which it is a pity not to supply every worker in the territorial period with a note of every paper he may possibly desire, yet there are many classes whose chance of usefulness is slight and whose mass is too great to permit their inclusion in a manual not designed to extend to many volumes. The compiler has, however, been aware of the importance of enabling the reader to know what he can expect to find in the volume and what he can not, and has endeavored to confine the exercise of his own judgment by the observance of definite rules which can in the main be stated here. Thus, letters which merely transmit the commissions of territorial officials below the rank of governor or secretary, or which merely acknowledge the receipt of such commissions, have been omitted. Similar omissions have been practised in the case of letters merely transmitting printed or written documents, or acknowledging their receipt; of routine letters on public printing; of Thanksgiving proclamations; of bonds of officials; of pardons; of papers respecting capitol buildings, penitentiaries and lands for the same; and of minor fiscal items relating, for instance, to public printing, claims for services rendered, and lesser legislative, executive, or administrative expenses.

Numerous other papers have been omitted as being of merely routine character. The query will naturally arise, what classes of documents have been so regarded? They may be divided into two sorts: documents which are of such a character ab initio, and others which acquired such a character through the repetition of actions taken by similar processes, recurring at frequent intervals. Of the first sort are monthly returns from local land offices, notices of dispatch of public monies, and the like. In the second class are such things as administrative instructions to local officials, or discussions of annual appropriations for surveys. There remains, after all pains have been taken, an opportunity for difference of opinion upon these questions of inclusion and exclusion, and for a misunderstanding of the lines upon which the process has been conducted; yet it is believed that in each case a sufficient number of documents of exceptional importance have been included to guide the still unsatisfied inquirer to the places where larger amounts of the same kind of material may be found.

When so many papers are to be found in Washington because of statutes or executive orders requiring that copies be transmitted to the national capital, it is inevitable that many documents have been found in duplicate. In listing such papers it has been natural to note the original and its place, when found, in preference to transcripts, and the letter sent rather than the office copy retained and subsequently transmitted. Many other documents have been omitted because their text can be found in print. The chief sources from which material was checked for this purpose were the United States public documents of the period before 1873, the statute books of the territories, the American State Papers, General Greely's Public Documents of the First Fourteen Congresses, and the publications of various historical societies. In some cases documents already printed have nevertheless been listed for the sake of certain remarks which needed to be made respecting them or their inclosures.

In many cases, especially in the later periods, territorial documents inclosed newspapers. While not every document printed in these has been listed, the newspaper itself has ordinarily been mentioned, printed matter of this origin, often difficult to find, deserving on the whole to be treated on the same plan as manuscript.

This is still more true of bills of the United States Senate or House of Representatives, which will be found to occur in great numbers in this book. Until about the Fourteenth Congress most of the bills which Mr. Parker found in the House and Senate files are not printed, but apparently are rough drafts. After this time he usually found printed bills. But since so few sets of these bills are in existence (hardly any sets approaching completeness are to be found outside of Washington) it is plainly proper to treat them in this book as manuscripts are treated. They have been listed mainly from the collection in the Library of Congress, which is fairly complete from the Sixteenth Congress to the Forty-second Congress, with which the material in the book concludes. Bills missing from this set have in most cases been found and listed in the Senate and House files or the House Library.

While in general each document has been separately listed, a higher degree of compression has been effected in some cases where it seemed that the reader's interests were not in the least endangered by such a course. These were mostly cases where many documents of uniform tenor were sent out simultaneously or almost simultaneously to a group of minor officials. They occur perhaps most often in dealing with the volumes of executive journals, which territorial governors customarily kept and in which all their letters, many of them routine communications, were alike transcribed in full.

The reader who wishes a fuller understanding of the sources indicated in the references which are made in the items of the book will usually find the data which he requires in the second edition of Messrs. Van Tyne and Leland's Guide. It may be well to mention, however, by way of caution, that in many bureaus some changes have been effected in the four years since that volume was issued. Packages of mounted material in the Department of State, which had not been so treated four years ago, may especially be mentioned.

In the Bureau of Rolls and Library the territorial material is for the most part made up in volumes, and the documents for a given territory may, if nothing contrary is stated, be understood to be placed in the volume or volumes for that territory. There are, however, in the volumes many exceptions to a strictly chronological arrangement and some anomalies in distribution.

In the Bureau of Indexes and Archives the Domestic Letters (letters sent) are bound in volumes, regularly numbered. The volumes of Miscellaneous Letters (letters received), however, are numbered only up to volume 97, which relates to 1823. There are no volumes in the series for 1824 and no record now remains respecting any volumes of that year. From 1825, however, the volumes are stamped with dates by years and months, and these designations are used in the references in this volume. In cases where two volumes are required for a single month, roman numerals are added.

In the Treasury Department the series examined in whole or in part were those in the Division of Mail and Files called N-O, N, A, B, C, D, E, F, and G S. The archives of the War Department are, in accordance with the departmental order of February 23, 1897, set forth on pp. 110-113 of the second edition of Messrs. Van Tyne and Leland's Guide, entirely closed to historical investigators. At the Department of Justice nothing concerning territories is preserved except papers relating to individual cases.

The only documents examined in the Post-Office Department were the letter-books of the Postmaster-General, which are nearly complete. These contain much valuable material which can not be neglected by historians, but relatively little of it would come within the classification adopted for this volume. A considerable number of papers was listed, and a notion of the contents of the series can be obtained from these items; but after a time little or nothing could be obtained, because of increasing routine, and the inspection of the series was discontinued.

At the Interior Department, in the office of the Secretary, the Railroad and Lands letter-books were the only series examined. They contain instructions from the Secretary of the Interior to the Commissioners of the General Land Office. Little appropriate to our purpose was found, and when the material became wholly of a routine nature the search was discontinued. Of the territorial material filed at the Interior Deparment, Patents and Miscellaneous Division, since 1873, a list is given in an appendix to this volume. It will be observed that some of it antedates the year 1873, but as it is all in one place, and readily accessible in connection with the material subsequent to 1873, the compiler has thought it best to content himself with printing this list. The only series examined in the office of Indian Affairs were the letter-books of the Commissioner and the miscellaneous files of letters received. Neither was followed to the end, but only so far as it yielded anything to the purpose, most of the material being either too local or too general to fit into our classification.

In the General Land Office the first series of letters sent, beginning in 1796, is "O," the rest of the documents being designated by numbers of the letter-books in which they were found under Division C. Letters received, miscellaneous and from registers and receivers, were followed as far as 1833 and 1836 respectively. By that time very few letters received come within our classification. After that date a new system is found, in accordance with which the relevant documents are so scattered through the different divisions that it would be an endless task to find them, and are so disposed of that they could not possibly be designated by references through which the searcher could find them again. Letters to and from the surveyors-general, in Division E, form an important class of documents for the purpose of this volume and were worked through with care, though under the limitations already described. Letters to the surveyors-general were followed to 1846, by which time everything was of routine nature. Letters to and from the office, on surveys, are of great importance to the local historian, surveyors often giving interesting accounts of their journeys, descriptions of the inhabitants, pioneer conditions, physical features of the country, etc., and the items listed in accordance with the delimitation which we have felt obliged to adopt will hardly show the full historical value of these two series.

The Library of Congress is remarkable for the series of printed bills already mentioned. The Senate files contain papers from the First Congress to the present. Though not complete, they constitute a very rich deposit of historical material which, like that in the House files, has almost never been examined by any historical inquirer, and to which access was obtained only by a special resolution of the Senate. The Senate files are well arranged and it is comparatively easy to locate any given paper, though it needs to be remembered that the alphabetical filing of petitions and memorials is sometimes by name and sometimes by subject.

The files of the House of Representatives were, at the time of examination, kept in bundles and boxes in the upper part of the Capitol building. The labels or pencilled memoranda upon the bundles were sometimes an insecure guide to the chronology. A box with the mark "22 Congress" might contain documents ranging from 1803 to 1870, while, of the bundles within, those designated "reports" might really be bills and vice versa. The only possible method, under such circumstances, was to give to each document in our list the number of the Congress stated upon the box or bundle containing the document. A short time after Mr. Parker finished his work in the House files a rearrangement of them was begun, in connection with a plan to intrust certain material, selected as of distinct historical interest, to the Library of Congress. The understanding has been that in this rearrangement it is intended to put under the number of any Congress all the documents whose dates bring them within the period of that Congress. Accordingly mention of the Congress was crossed out on the slips obtained from the House files, and the searcher is to assume that the location of such papers is determined by their date. The largest class of territorial documents represented in the House files is that of petitions. Legislative memorials and resolutions have been listed under the date of their approval by the governor, when that date was given; otherwise, under the date of their passage or adoption, if known.

In the arrangement of the material, a certain body of general items, relating either to all the territories of a given period or to three or four of them, has been placed first. Then follow items respecting individual territories in an alphabetical order. Those who will use this book will hardly need to be cautioned as to the variation, from time to time, in territorial boundaries, or as to other changes in the meaning of geographical names; it may be mentioned, however, that items relating to West Florida before the incorporation of parts of it in neighboring states have been placed under Florida, while Louisiana before March 26, 1804, Louisiana District and Territory from that date to June 14, 1812, and Orleans Territory have been made separate rubrics. In the chronological arrangement dates of the form 1817-1819 have been set before those consisting simply of 1817, without month or day; the latter before those having months and days; and dates with merely the month, known or conjectural, before those which are complete. That a few dates run earlier or later than the strict period of the legal existence of the territory has in each case an explanation, which will probably be apparent.

Documents which are found inclosed in other documents, or which are known with certainty to have been so inclosed, have been indicated by smaller type, set beneath the letter or document which covered them and, if their original order of arrangement has been preserved, have been listed in that order, regardless of chronology. References to their location, when, as is usually the case, it is the same as that of the covering letter or document, have been omitted.

In indicating the contents of the documents brevity has been studiously sought for. The intention has been to give the titles of federal officials in capitals, while those of territorial secretaries of state, etc., have been kept in lower case. In the references it has been deemed useless to give any pagination. Most of the manuscript volumes referred to are not paged, and where they are, the systems are usually marked by much confusion. The abbreviations used in the references are explained in a separate list, which follows this preface.

For the obliging kindness with which the various governmental repositories were thrown open for Mr. Parker's examination, and with which facilities for his work were accorded, cordial thanks are due, on our part and on that of the historical investigators who may use this book, to the officials respectively in charge. That any investigator who may wish information respecting the documents here listed, or copies of them, may freely call for the aid of the Department of Historical Research in the Carnegie Institution of Washington, if it seems likely that this will be useful, will it is hoped be taken for granted.

J. Franklin Jameson.

KANSAS

(Territory of Kansas established by act of May 30, 1854. Admitted as a state Jan. 29, 1861, by act of that date.)

The executive minutes of Kansas, as contained in the volume in the Bureau of Rolls and Library of the State Department, have been entirely printed. Those in the documents of the House or Senate are in most cases exactly the same as in the manuscript volume, while in the Collections of the Kansas Historical Society they differ somewhat, having been printed from a separate set of copies, preserved in Topeka.

The executive minutes of Govs. Reeder and Shannon and Acting Gov. Woodson are printed in the Kansas Historical Collections, III. 226-240. Those of Gov. Geary, Sept. 9, 1856–Sept. 30, 1856, are found in Ho. Ex. Doc. No. 1, 34 Cong., 3 sess., v. 1, pt. 1, pp. 86-173; Oct. 1, 1856–Oct. 16, 1856 in Sen. Ex. Doc. No. 17, 35 Cong., 1 sess., v. 6, pp. 27-65; Oct. 17, 1856–Nov. 21, 1856 in Ho. Ex. Doc. No. 10, 34 Cong., 3 sess., v. 3, pp. 1-36; and Nov. 21, 1856–Mar. 31, 1857 in Sen. Ex. Doc. No. 17, 35 Cong., 1 sess., v. 6, pp. 65-208.

All of the above records of Gov. Geary's administration are also printed in the Kansas Historical Collections, IV. 520-745.

The remaining executive minutes in the manuscript volume are printed in volume V. of the last named collections.

The two manuscript volumes of governors' correspondence, etc., have also been largely printed in the Kansas Historical Collections, III.-V. inclusive, and may be easily checked by the indexes in the latter volumes. Only those documents omitted in the above printed collections have been listed.

1814-1826

The bundle of executive and legislative proceedings in the Bureau of Rolls and Library, referred to in Van Tyne and Leland's Guide to the Archives of the Government in Washington, second ed., p. 40(e), is in bulk about equal to three folio volumes, and is composed entirely of transcripts. The executive proceedings extend from Oct., 1814, to the close of 1826. The material within them falls chiefly under the heads of proclamations, appointments, and election returns.

Many of the proclamations are unimportant in character, while others deal with topics of larger interest. Such are Gov. Cass's proclamation establishing the county of Crawford (Oct. 26, 1818), and one of Sept. 10, 1822, in which the boundaries of several counties are defined. The latter is accompanied by a map. There is also some interesting material bearing on the genesis of the state university, and the "Constitution of the First Protestant Society of Detroit" (July 16, 1825). Election returns are very full, and there are many accompanying documents. Among these is the only printed one in the bundle, a pamphlet entitled A Report of the Proceedings in Relation to the Contested Election for Delegate to the Nineteenth Congress, from the Territory of Michigan, etc. Letters from one individual to another or to several individuals are very rare. When found, however, they have been listed, and appear below under their respective dates. The legislative proceedings call for no special mention, being simply a compilation of the "Legislative Records of the Territory of Michigan" (Oct., 1814–June, 1823, and Jan., 1824–Dec., 1825).
